FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

6 September 2018

Active tracking devices on Air France KLM Martinair Cargo flights

With effect from the first week of September, Air France KLM Martinair Cargo (AFKLMP) will be offering customers the option of using active tracking devices on its flights.

This will enable them to track their shipments more precisely, whenever and however it suits them best.

Christophe Boucher, Senior Vice President Sales & Distribution at AFKLMP: "Our aim is to support our customers in using end-to-end tracking solutions throughout the journey of their shipment. This forms part of our digital journey, expressed in the services we wish to offer our customers."

Customers place the tracking devices in their shipment before acceptance and take them out again after delivery at the final destination.

The devices are capable of:

- Sending data through telecom (or other) networks;
- Providing GPS location and sensor data (temperature, humidity, shock/tilt and light).

The use of active tracking devices on board our flights is subject to specific conditions and the devices must be approved by AFKLMP. All details related to the use of tracking devices can be found on this special page on our website.
